Hi Friends & Neighbors,

I read somewhere that in order to master a skill, it takes about 10,000 hours. Now let's be honest, some folks have been at something a long time and mastery would be a stretch in describing their performance.

But for people who are committed and adapted to a skill, profession, trade, or activity that number rings true. So what's this got to do with lawns and trees? A lot actually.

Not everyone at Living Water has 10,000 hours, but all owners and managers have that and much more. Those who are coming up behind us have the advantage of our experience, but they have more than that as well.

They have our commitment to teaching and training them to be as good or better than we are and ever were. And in our experience, most of them eat this up. It is a marker of a Living Water Team Member. The care and investment we make is reciprocated many times over. And it is our clients who benefit the most from that.

One evening I was visiting with a 3rd-year employee, and he was hurt and frustrated because his client did not believe his diagnosis of what was going on with the client's lawn. I listened to his description of and conclusions about what was happening on our client's turf. He was spot on. Despite having done nearly 15,000 applications, it came down to our client's opinion that since it wasn't me talking to them, it couldn't be right.

Not gonna lie, it made me feel kinda good, but also sad. My co-worker is an amazing, caring professional. He seriously loves this company and our clients. And he's good at his job. We train our folks to say 3 important words when the situation calls for it. These "magic" words would benefit our whole world, especially leaders and "experts." What are they? I'm glad you asked!

"I don't know."

Wouldn't it be great if more politicians, opinion-formers, and "experts" admitted, "I don't know" when they didn't? I do know this. People whose opinions I have come to trust over time have said those three magic words to me on multiple occasions. So when they do know something, man am I confident in their knowledge because they admit when they don't.

This July lawns didn't look good. That included my own lawn. Clouds and wind (way above normal) affected color and created fungus/disease issues in almost everybody's lawn. Here is the good news...something I DO know. Follow our mowing and watering instructions and normal summer sun will help your lawn bounce back and look like we all want it to look.

Thanks for choosing us. YOU are important to us. I hope that's something YOU know!

God bless you, talk to you soon :)
